Quotables

Seth Reeves on his biggest learning experience over the past few years... “Golf is hard, life's hard, but you've just got to persevere really. It's pretty tough to get to the Tour twice and then still play poorly and really be friends with some of the best players in the world and watch them do their thing and then you kind of struggle. Then really to be on a medical last year was pretty tough as well. Then -our twins were born, so I'm kind of at home taking care of little babies while all my buddies are making birdies. Yeah, just thankful for finally just some good play, to see some things turn around. Really, just to find kind of my game again. I've just been searching for a long time and it's nice to kind of have- some conviction for that.”

Reeves on his partner, Brian Baumgartner, making the cut... “Coming down No. 18 we kind of looked at each other like, hey, let's finish this off. It was really cool for me to make one for myself, but for him, too. For him to just be excited to just get one more birdie to hopefully put us over the edge there... It's what's so cool about golf is you have these celebrities that are so good in other areas of life that we kind of look up to them, but then they look up to us, they look up to us for what we do. It's kind of cool to see him competing versus just doing what he does as an actor or a podcast host or stuff like that. It's really cool to see the joy that golf brings people.”

Bill Haas on playing in his hometown event... “I don't know. I think when I was super young, for one, I was -I'm definitely still Jay Haas' son, but I think I was more so that then a little bit. And I hadn't done anything in the game of golf, so there was... -it's- not pressure, it's just that acknowledgment, I guess. -Now I think people acknowledge that I've played good golf in the past, so certainly don't want to come here and show up and, you know, really struggle. I don't know, there's that little bit of added pressure that flows into your head a little bit, I really want to do well this week in front of some people that I care about. For whatever reason, back then maybe I was just young enough where it was just mom and dad I was trying to impress.”
