Today – Storms overnight split the course with just a trace of precipitation noted. Some ongoing t-storm activity in northern MO may work towards the area through mid-day but will likely weaken upon approach. A low (<20%) chance for t-storms will remain in the forecast from 12PM-3PM due to that potential. While the trailing cold front continues to drop into the area later on, pop-up t-storms have potential to initiate along the boundary between 4-6PM but confidence remains low on areal coverage.

Sunday – Dry and pleasant summertime conditions are expected Sunday with much less humidity and high temperatures struggling to reach 80F through the day. Breezy N/NE'ly winds on the heels of the frontal passage will relax throughout the day. A few gusts upwards of 20-22mph are possible early in the AM before general 6-12mph winds take over through the PM.
