Extended forecast – A strong area of low pressure will track very near Bermuda tonight into Saturday. Rain likely develops during the overnight hours and could become heavy with some lightning also possible. Southerly winds will increase quickly tonight with gusts approaching 40 mph. The steadiest rains should diminish by sunrise, however periods of showers will remain possible during the day. As the backside of the low reaches Bermuda, a period of strong to very strong northwest winds are expected Saturday afternoon. Gusts of 40-50 mph are possible. The threat for precipitation will diminish for the second half of the weekend, however brisk winds will persist.

Forecast prepared by meteorologist Kyle Koval.
