Extended forecast – A more typical northeast Trade Winds pattern will be in place the remainder of the week. This will bring a low shower threat during the overnight and morning hours with dry conditions favored during the afternoon. Rain chances will be kept in the 15-30% through the weekend with Friday appearing to be the most likely day to remain completely dry. Winds will remain elevated the rest of the week and likely become breezy this weekend with gusts of 25-30 mph possible.
