7 AM Weather Update

Thursday, April 11, 2024

Synopsis: We are currently dry with the precipitation shifting to our east. Scattered showers and isolated thunderstorms are 75 miles to the southwest of Augusta moving to the northeast. This activity may impact ANGC between 7:30AM-9AM, but current track has the lightning threat remaining to our south. Peak wind gusts to 40 mph will be possible through 11AM with sustained winds of 15-20 gusting to 30-35 mph continuing through the afternoon. Rainfall totals will be much less than forecasted yesterday with additional amounts likely holding under 0.50". Partly to mostly cloudy skies can be expected for the bulk of the afternoon before scattered showers and isolated thunderstorms return late afternoon into the early evening hours. Drier and slightly cooler conditions return Friday with mostly sunny skies. It will continue to be windy 15-20 gusting to 30 mph throughout the day. Sunny skies and warmer temperatures can be expected this weekend with highs in the 70s Saturday and low to mid-80s on Sunday.
