

MONDAY, JULY 1, 2024 – USSO 6 AM WEATHER FORECAST

Sunday's rain amounts, including a brief overnight spritz, totaled 0.59" to go along with 198 strikes that included a dozen or so less than 3 miles from the course between 3 - 6 PM. The cold front passed through Newport overnight, thinning out the clouds and dropping temps down in the mid 60s with dewpoints falling all the way back into the upper 50s as the sun came up. Winds shifted over to the northwest with that passing boundary, will slowly work their way over to the northeast this afternoon as the surface low drifts further to our east. Winds speeds will remain fairly breezy throughout the day as a result of that slow moving surface low, jumping up into the mid teens just after play resumes, holding steady into the early evening, and including the occasional gust in the mid 20s. More sun than clouds this morning make way for overcast skies this afternoon as excess moisture across the region takes advantage of the warming temps allowing for showers to form for 'happy hour' late this afternoon while cloud cover limiting daytime temps below normal, as they have been all week, as temps climb into the mid 70s this afternoon.
