

SATURDAY, JUNE 29, 2024 – USSO 5 AM Weather Forecast

Dewpoints are back in the mid 50s with winds holding steady from the SSW overnight continuing to feed moisture into the region. There is heavy rain to our NW, covering the majority of NY, as mid - level flow out of the SW will continue to guide this activity up into ME throughout the day. Clouds will become more prevalent throughout the day keeping temps struggling to get into the low 70s ahead of the developing marine layer taking place offshore to our SW mid - morning as it then sets its sights on Newport with an anticipated afternoon arrival still looking likely. Flow will remain southerly throughout the day as intensity gradually increases from the morning into the afternoon with speeds of 7 - 9 mph as the first groups tee off jumping up to 13 - 15 mph as flow drifts slightly over to the SE before returning back from the SW then this evening ahead of the approaching showers. SUN remains a gray, rainy New England day with showers early dropping around a quarter of an inch as breezy flow from the SW combines with breaking clouds pushing speeds in the upper teens gusting near 30 mph in the AM with temps topping out near 74.
