Extended forecast – A low (25%) threat for showers exists tonight into Saturday morning, however much of this period remains dry. A steadier period of rain is then expected to overspread the area by Saturday afternoon. Pockets of heavy rain could occur, but lightning is not expected. Additional waves of rain are possible Saturday night, although there is some uncertainty with the placement of this activity. If the axis of heaviest rain impacts Little Rock, rainfall amounts over 1" would be likely. The potential for showers should linger into Sunday morning with improving conditions by Sunday afternoon.
