Thursday – The thunderstorm pattern continues today with mostly sunny conditions in the morning. Winds will begin light and variable. After 12pm, thunderstorms will likely form in the mountains and then in the early afternoon move off and lead to rain showers, thunderstorms, and high wind risks. Any thunderstorm or shower in the area may lead to 40+ mph wind from variable directions. Temperatures will be cooler only reaching the mid 80s today.

Extended forecast – Drier air is expected to move in for the weekend lowering the thunderstorm chances, but leading to much warmer temperatures. Friday will still have low shower/thunderstorm chances in the afternoon. Temperatures will reach the low 90s Friday, and then over the weekend temperatures may approach 100F under mostly sunny skies. Winds will be very similar each day with a variable wind in the morning and then a E-SE wind during the afternoons. Any thunderstorms in the vicinity may lead to wind shifts and stronger winds gusts in excess of 40mph.
