

THURSDAY, JUNE 18, 2026 – 5 AM WEATHER FORECAST

A strong storm system is expected to impact today's weather in two modes: strong southerly winds, and light precipitation. The wind speeds are forecasted to increase dramatically through lunchtime, with peak gusts reaching towards 30 to 36 mph in the 12 to 5 PM timeframe. The rule of "more sun, more speed" is in effect for today, which causes a tricky forecast as clouds attempt to clear out this afternoon. Either way, sustained values of 16 to 20 mph can be expected. Heavy rainfall is generally unlikely. That said, light rain showers or sprinkles attempt to overtake the region later this morning, with the associated dense overcast working in tandem to delay the strongest wind gusts. We forecast raindrops in the back half of the morning, hanging onto a chance of scattered development in the afternoon hours with the worst of the weather in the latest models potentially avoiding us this afternoon to the north and west. The wind relaxes some this evening, but remains elevated into Friday with morning clouds giving way to some afternoon sun as our humid conditions today become drier tomorrow and remain through the weekend.
