Extended forecast – A cold front will push into Iowa on Saturday. In the morning, a few scattered showers and thunderstorms will develop but the bulk of the activity will be north of Des Moines. After 2pm the cold front will trigger showers and thunderstorms that will move across the area and should exit the region by 7pm. Skies will clear into the evening and Sunday morning will start cool with partial sunshine. Skies clear out further on Sunday afternoon with winds increasing. Temperatures will be much cooler with highs in the low to mid 70s.
