

SATURDAY, JULY 4, 2026 - 11 AM WEATHER FORECAST

After picking up just 0.02 inches at tee off this morning the skies cleared out quickly, leaving us at 86° with a southwest breeze at 5–10 mph, but don't get too comfortable though, because an outflow boundary will be charging through Ohio and has storms written all over this afternoon. Rain chances start at 40% through the early afternoon before the main event arrives in the 5–8 PM window, when chances jump to 60%, lightning enters the picture, and storms capable of dropping a half inch to an inch or more will be in play. Either way the overnight stays unsettled with rain chances holding at 60% as lingering activity filters through before we turn the page to Sunday. Sunday opens with the chance of a foggy and damp start as overnight moisture hangs over the course before conditions gradually improve, but don't be fooled by the quiet morning, because the atmosphere will have plenty of energy loaded up and ready to go with the most likely storm window arriving after 2 PM at 60% chances. Highs barely crack 90° Sunday as increased cloud cover takes some of the edge off the heat, and a wind shift from the south-southwest to northwest at 6–12 mph.
